

Feedback Matters!

What is Feedback?

Any information, formal or informal, that students provide about their university experiences.

This infographic relates to the information provided to university staff by students on their experiences of teaching and learning.

Why give feedback on teaching and learning?

Fuel change – highlighting issues can improve teaching and learning for you and for future students.

Think actively – providing feedback encourages you to assess what is important for your own learning.

Shape the future of the University – by providing frequent feedback you can encourage ongoing partnership between staff and students at Maynooth.

What you should expect:

Feedback might be requested from you in a variety of different ways.

There will be safeguards to ensure confidentiality.

Your feedback will be responded to.

Feedback tips.

Be specific – Give examples of what is working well and what you would like to see changed.

Avoid personal comments – Focus on the teaching process not the person teaching!

Share your ideas – What changes, small or large, could be introduced?

As a student you are in a unique position to provide feedback that will really improve teaching and learning!

For more information see Student Feedback and Teaching Evaluation Initiative.